The Family Book

CONCEPT

The idea

An open photo book on a warm oak table, seen from above in soft morning light. Page one is handwritten: “Hello! This is us.” Around it, small taped-in prints show the kitchen table set for tea, a made bed with a sage blanket labelled “Your room”, the family dog, the park at the end of the road and a note: “Friday tea = pizza night”.

It is a family book, something most people have never heard of. The website explains: “A family book introduces your household to a child before arrival. It may include photographs of family members, the home, bedroom, pets, local places and everyday routines.” One warm image shows how carefully a move is prepared, from the child’s side of the table.

HEADLINE

Before a child arrives, a family book can say hello.

What I found on the website

- The matching page (organicfostering.co.uk/referrals-and-matchings) answers “What is a family book?” in the words quoted above, and says: “A strong match is about much more than an available bedroom. It considers the whole child and the whole household.”
- Proof: “Organic Fostering’s May 2025 Ofsted report noted careful matching and attention to children’s cultural and heritage needs.”
- Honest limits: “Where time permits, introductions help the child and family become familiar before the move… Emergency placements may happen more quickly.” So the headline says a family book can say hello, not that it always does.
- No rush: “There is no guaranteed wait for a first placement… The priority is the right match, not the fastest placement.”

Why it works

- Curiosity stops the scroll. Few people know what a family book is, so the image makes them read, and the idea is lovely enough to save and share.
- It shows care without showing a child. The welcome is seen from the child’s side, with no child on screen and nothing that could identify anyone.
- It answers a real worry. “How would a child be matched with us?” The post shows a careful process, backed by the May 2025 Ofsted finding.
- It invites easy comments. “If you made a family book, what would go on page one?” People answer about their home and their dog, not about care experiences.

Why it’s new, and what Pinterest showed

Earlier posts covered cultural matching; none shows the family book or the Ofsted matching finding. The look is new for the feed: a real book seen from above on oak and linen, rather than the paper collage of “Home, in every language” or the peach wall of “One Weekend at a Time”. Logged-out Pinterest searches (“family photo book flat lay”, “photo album open on table aesthetic”, “welcome book for foster child”) showed warm overhead shots of open albums, loose prints and tape on wooden tables, which we borrow. The foster-specific results were cartoon storybooks and busy printable templates. We avoid those, along with children’s faces.

LAYOUT PREVIEW

A sketch at 30% of real size (1 px here is about 3.3 px in the post). Prints are placeholders for real photos; all text and the logo are added in design.

1. Logo. The real logo file (the site's SVG), top left, about 220 px wide. Never AI-generated.
2. Eyebrow. "How matching works" in a small cream pill, Poppins SemiBold, 27 px.
3. Headline. "Before a child arrives, a family book can say hello." Nunito Black, about 73 px, plum, "say hello." in deep orange (#D94A00), on the linen runner across the top third.
4. The family book (the hero). A real linen-covered hardback, open and slightly turned, seen from above. Sage cover, thick cream pages, white-bordered prints held with orange and peach washi tape.
5. Page one. "Hello! This is us." in real handwriting, about 50 px tall: the one handwritten line meant to be read.
6. The prints and labels. Places, a pet and objects only: the kitchen table, "Your room", the dog, "Our park", "Friday tea = pizza night". Labels at least 28 px.
7. Subline. "It may include photos of your home, the bedroom, pets, local places and everyday routines." Nunito Bold, 30 px, on the oak.
8. Sign-off. The site's solid magenta (#B7006E) pill, "Ask how matching works", the phone and web address (so it works on Facebook), and "Rated Good by Ofsted · Inspected May 2025" on two lines at the right, 60 px or more from the bottom. All 26 px or larger.

VISUAL DIRECTION

- Look and set: an honest overhead flat lay in soft morning light from the upper left: a light oak table, a cream linen runner across the top third for the headline, a mug of tea at the edge. Warm and lived-in, not over-styled.
- No people: no children, faces or hands. The prints show places, a pet and objects; the handwriting carries the warmth.
- Colour: oak and cream, with brand accents in the props: orange tape (#FF6411), a sage blanket and plum type (#5B174F). Magenta on the button only.
- Type: Nunito (the site's font) for headline and subline, Poppins for labels, and real handwriting in the book, not a handwriting font.
- Safe area: text and logo at least 60 px from every edge; the 3:4 profile grid trims about 34 px a side, so nothing is lost.
- Story size (1080×1920): extend the table and linen; keep text out of the top 250 px and bottom 340 px.

HOW TO MAKE IT

- Photo route (best, about two hours): print four small photos (stock, or a staff member's home with permission; no people), tape them into a real photo book, write the labels by hand and shoot from above by a window. Add all copy and the logo in Figma or Canva.
- AI route: generate the table, book and blank prints, then add real photos, scanned handwriting and all copy in design (AI garbles handwriting). Turn on the AI label on Instagram and Facebook. Prompt:

> Overhead photograph, 4:5, soft morning daylight from the upper left. A light oak table with a cream linen runner across the top third. In the lower half, an open hardback photo book with a sage-green linen cover and thick cream pages, slightly turned. Four small blank white-bordered prints fixed with orange and peach washi tape. Blank space on the left page. A white mug of tea at the right edge. Calm, empty linen at the top for a headline. Warm, editorial. No people, no faces, no hands, no text, no letters, no logos.

Before a child arrives, a family book can say hello. 📖

A family book introduces your household to a child before arrival. It may include photographs of family members, the home, bedroom, pets, local places and everyday routines.

Where time permits, introductions help the child and family become familiar before the move. Emergency placements may happen more quickly.

It’s one small part of matching. A strong match is about much more than an available bedroom: it considers the whole child and the whole household. Our May 2025 Ofsted report noted careful matching and attention to children’s cultural and heritage needs.

The priority is the right match, not the fastest placement.

COPY CHECK AND SOURCES

- Every fact is from organicfostering.co.uk, checked 2 November 2026: /referrals-and-matchings (the family book FAQ, “much more than an available bedroom”, the introductions and emergency lines, the May 2025 Ofsted note, “the right match, not the fastest placement” and “without pressure or obligation”) and the homepage (the Ofsted line, the phone number).
- No promises. The headline says a family book can say hello, because introductions happen where time permits. Nothing implies anyone will be approved, matched or placed by a certain time.
- No people, no real details. The prints show places, a pet and objects. “Biscuit” and the notes are fictional. If a real family’s photos are used, get their consent; never show a real child in care or any birth-family detail.
- Advertising: no personal-attribute wording, so it avoids Meta’s personal-attributes rule. The comment question is about people’s homes, not their care experiences.
- Before posting: check the bio link goes to /referrals-and-matchings, proofread the handwriting, and turn on the AI label on both platforms if any part is AI-generated. Don’t post it right after “One Weekend at a Time” (same callout structure).
