Bodyrade: “Deliberately Sour.”

Static post · Instagram and Facebook feed · 1080 × 1350 (4:5) · Sour Raspberry flavour hero, bright colour-block set

CONCEPT

The idea

Your website describes Sour Raspberry as “a sharp raspberry profile with a deliberately sour edge.” Two words of that line become the whole post: DELIBERATELY SOUR.

The look flips the campaign from night to day. Instead of the dark navy set, the Mixology Bottle stands on a plinth in a bright, all-raspberry studio, with hard sunlight and sharp shadows. Crimson powder sits sealed in the capsule at the top of the bottle. One raspberry is balanced on the cap’s carry loop, as if it has just dropped out of the headline. It’s a flavour post with attitude: a little cheeky, very bold and instantly readable.

What I found

- Website (bodyrade.com, checked 31 Oct 2026): the three flavour pages describe Sour Raspberry as “a sharp raspberry profile with a deliberately sour edge”, Sweet Pear as “a crisp pear profile with smooth, clean sweetness” and Orange & Mango as “bright citrus with rounded mango…”. The homepage says “UK STOCK AVAILABLE SOON!” and shows Sour Raspberry as “COMING SOON! - Contact for details”, so the call to action stays “Register for a sample”. Each flavour page carries a caffeine warning, quoted word for word in the caption.
- Your earlier concepts: “Twist. Drop. Fresh.” and “Locked In Fresh.” both used the dark navy set, a giant yellow word and the Orange & Mango capsule to explain how the bottle works. This post sells the taste instead, in a new flavour, a new colour and a new mood, so the grid doesn’t repeat itself.
- Pinterest: pre-workout ads are mostly tubs exploding with fruit, smoke and shouting type on dark backgrounds. The bright, monochrome “colour-block” still life is one of the most-pinned product looks right now: one saturated colour for the set, hard shadows and fruit balanced on simple plinths. No pre-workout ad in my search used it.

Why it works

- It stops the scroll by colour. A full-frame raspberry red with one black word stands out among dark gym posts, and the colour itself says “sour raspberry” before anyone reads.
- It’s your own words. The headline is lifted from your product page, so it’s on-voice and makes no performance claim.
- It sells the flavour without hiding the bottle. The capsule of crimson powder is still the hero detail, so the product idea comes through even in a taste post.
- It starts a pair. Follow it with Sweet Pear on a pale pear-green set: “CRISP. CLEAN. SWEET.”, again from your site. The caption asks “Team sour or team sweet?”, an easy question to answer in the comments.

LAYOUT PREVIEW

1. Flavour tag. A black pill with yellow type: "SOUR RASPBERRY · COMING SOON", matching the homepage.
2. DELIBERATELY SOUR. Heavy italic in black, with "SOUR." as big as the frame allows. Black, not yellow this time, so it looks nothing like the two navy posts.
3. Subline. "Sharp raspberry. Sour edge. Mixed only when you're ready." and "5-IN-1 PRE-WORKOUT" beneath.
4. The bottle. Assembled and filled, standing on a raspberry plinth. Crimson powder shows in the slim capsule under the black collar.
5. The raspberry. One berry balanced on the carry loop, right under the headline: the wink that makes people look twice.
6. Sign-off. A black band with the real yellow logo, "REGISTER FOR A SAMPLE" and "BODYRADE.COM", which works on Facebook too.

This preview is a quick vector sketch for layout and copy. The final post is a photograph or 3D render of the real bottle on a real set.

VISUAL DIRECTION

- Set: one colour, top to bottom. A seamless raspberry wall and floor (around #E8325E) and a simple rectangular plinth in the same colour, a shade lighter on top. Nothing else in the room.
- Light: one hard light from the upper right, like midday sun, casting crisp shadows of the bottle and plinth to the left. Bright and graphic, the opposite of the moody navy posts.
- Bottle: the real Mixology Bottle, assembled: black loop cap, one black ribbed collar, a slim capsule of crimson powder hanging inside, cold water in the main chamber, black base. The printed chevrons and wordmark face the camera.
- Fruit: fresh raspberries only, one on the carry loop and a few on the floor and plinth. No splashes, no powder explosions, no ice.
- Colour and type: raspberry, black and Bodyrade yellow #FDCF09 for the tag and web address only. Headline in heavy italic (the preview uses Montserrat Black Italic, close to your pack lettering); Jost for the rest. On-image text is 26 px or larger at full size.
- Safe area: keep text and the logo 60 px from the edges, because the profile grid crops 4:5 posts to 3:4.

HOW TO MAKE IT

- Photo route (best): shoot the real bottle on painted card or coloured paper with one bare flash or direct sunlight. Hold the raspberry on the loop with a dab of museum putty. Add the type, tag and real logo in Photoshop or Figma.
- 3D route: render the bottle from your CAD files on a matching set in Blender or Cinema 4D, then add the type in design.
- AI route (fastest): AI tools redraw caps, collars and logos wrongly, so generate only the set and fruit with the prompt below, then composite a photo or render of the real bottle onto the plinth and match the shadow. Add all text and the logo in design.

AI image prompt (set and fruit only; the bottle is added afterwards)

> Bright monochrome studio still life, 4:5. A seamless raspberry-red set: wall and floor the same saturated raspberry pink-red (#E8325E). A simple rectangular plinth in the same colour, slightly lighter on top, in the lower right, with an empty space on top for a product. Hard midday sunlight from the upper right casting crisp, long shadows to the left. A few fresh raspberries scattered on the floor in the lower left and one on the plinth. Colour-blocked, clean and graphic, high saturation, sharp focus, premium advertising photography. Empty space across the top 40% for a headline. No bottle, no product, no text, no logos, no people.
