Concept

Who it's for

Owners of UK small and medium businesses (independent shops, hospitality and local services) who have ideas for their brand but no time, crew or budget for a "proper" film. Many think cinematic ads are only for big brands.

The idea

Every big campaign starts as a scribble. Between orders, a florist sketches an idea on a paper napkin in lime-green felt-tip: a loose bouquet and a little phone with an arrow. Then the ink lifts off the napkin and, in one continuous camera move, the sketch becomes a real peony and a premium flower film. The petals unfurl in slow motion against forest black.

The camera pulls back. The film is playing on a phone in a stranger's hand on a rainy street; they stop and tap. Next morning the shop's order printer is chattering, and the napkin is pinned on the corkboard by the till. The line comes straight from Hulk's homepage: "Imagination, put to work."

HOOK · FIRST 3 SECONDS
Got an idea on the back of a napkin?

END LINE
Imagination, put to work. Let's start with hello.

Why it works

- The hook gets a yes. Every owner has an idea they never made, and the question makes them picture it.
- The video is the proof. It's an AI film made by Hulk, so it shows what the studio can do instead of describing it. The homepage says: "Our creative and AI production team turns ambitious concepts into films, campaigns and content with a point of view."
- One brand thread. The lime ink is the only bright colour, from pen to ribbon to end card, in Hulk's forest-black palette.
- It starts conversations. "Send us a photo of your napkin" is an easy, fun ask that turns comments and DMs into leads.

Why it's new

Hulk's earlier videos (The Grey Street, Run It Again, Impossible to Miss, The Night Shift and 21:47) sell search, websites, ads or automation, mostly through a problem: being invisible, slow or missing enquiries. None of them promotes the creative and AI production studio, which the homepage now leads with. This one is aspirational, and its mechanic, a sketch becoming a real film in one unbroken move, is new for Hulk.

What Pinterest showed

Four logged-out searches on 28 Oct 2026 ("ai video ad cinematic", "ai commercial surreal transition", "seamless one take ai video", "ai generated ad campaign 2026"). Pins need a login to open, so these notes come from the search grids.

- Trending: one-shot transitions, where a single camera move passes through screens and worlds (many are labelled "Seedance One Shot"), and AI macro product films ("Real product. Unreal shoot.").
- Also common: relatable first lines such as "2 AM. Deadline in 1 hour."
- We borrow: the one-shot move, macro product cinematography and a first line people recognise.
- We avoid: robot heads, AI-influencer faces, perfume-ad clichés and giant objects in streets (already used in Impossible to Miss).

Shot list · 25 seconds

SHOT	VISUAL	ON-SCREEN TEXT	SOUND
1 · Hook 0:00–0:03	Macro, hands only. A hand sketches fast with a lime-green felt-tip on a white paper napkin on a florist's dark wooden workbench: loose loops of a bouquet and a little phone with an arrow. Petals, twine and scissors lie around it. Window light, deep shadows.	Got an idea on the back of a napkin?	Felt-tip squeak, a distant shop bell.
2 · The ink lifts 0:03–0:07	One continuous push-in. The lime lines lift off the napkin and curl into 3D, then fill with colour and texture until a real blush-pink peony bud sits where the drawing was.	Bring it to us.	Paper rustle into an airy, rising whoosh.
3 · The film 0:07–0:12	The camera keeps moving and we're inside a premium flower film. The peony unfurls in slow-motion time-lapse against forest black, lit by one shaft of light, with water droplets hanging in the air. It settles on a hand-tied bouquet with a lime satin ribbon.	We'll put it to work.	A deep, warm swell as the petals open.
4 · In the feed 0:12–0:16	The camera pulls back out of a phone screen: the bloom is playing in a stranger's hand on a rainy street at dusk. We see them over the shoulder, never their face. They stop walking and tap.	(None. The phone shows a plain "Order" button, added in edit.)	Rain, traffic hiss, one soft tap.
5 · Next morning 0:16–0:20	Back in the shop, the order printer chatters out a long strip of tickets while the florist's hands pull stems from buckets. Behind the till, the napkin is pinned to a corkboard beside a print of the finished film still.	Imagination, put to work.	Printer chatter, rustling stems, the door bell.
6 · End card 0:20–0:25	Designed in edit: forest black #121C17, the real Hulk Marketing logo, and a lime underline that draws itself like a felt-tip stroke.	Got an idea? Let's start with hello. Book a growth consultation · hulkmarketing.co.uk	One felt-tip stroke and a low, soft thump.

Voiceover (optional)

A calm British voice, about 45 words. Lines 3 to 5 reuse the website's own words. With the voiceover, burn in captions of the voiceover instead of the on-screen lines above.

0:00 "Got an idea on the back of a napkin?"

AI prompts

Generate each shot as a 5–10 second image-to-video clip from a keyframe (see the reference workflow below), then trim it to the timings above.

Shot 1 · Hook · start frame: a photo of the real napkin sketch on the bench

Photoreal macro shot, vertical 9:16. A hand holding a lime-green felt-tip pen quickly sketches loose loops of a flower bouquet and a small phone with an arrow on a white paper napkin. The napkin lies on a dark, weathered wooden florist's workbench with stray pink petals, garden twine and steel scissors. Soft window light from the left, deep shadows, shallow depth of field, 35 mm film grain. Slow push-in. Only the hand is visible.

Shot 2 · The ink lifts · start and end frames: the sketch, then a real peony bud on the napkin

Continuous slow push-in, no cut. The lime-green ink lines of a bouquet sketch lift off a white paper napkin and curl into three dimensions, then fill with real colour and texture, becoming a real blush-pink peony bud resting on the napkin. The ink lines fade as the petals turn photoreal. Macro, shallow depth of field, soft window light.

Shot 3 · The film

Premium flower commercial, photoreal macro. A blush-pink peony unfurls in slow-motion time-lapse against a deep forest-black background, lit by a single soft shaft of light from above. Fine water droplets hang in the air and catch the light. The camera glides around it and settles on a hand-tied bouquet wrapped in a lime-green satin ribbon. Anamorphic look, shallow depth of field, rich contrast.

Shot 4 · In the feed · start and end frames: the full-screen bloom, then the phone in hand on the street

The camera pulls back out of a smartphone screen showing a pink peony close-up, revealing the phone held by a person in a dark coat on a rainy UK city street at dusk. Over-the-shoulder view, face not visible. They stop walking and tap the screen with a thumb. Wet pavement, shop-window reflections, light rain, shallow depth of field, photoreal, 35 mm.

Shot 5 · Next morning

Morning in a small independent flower shop, photoreal. A compact receipt printer on the counter prints a long, curling strip of order tickets. A florist's hands, in a forest-green apron with rolled cream sleeves, quickly pull fresh stems from metal buckets. Behind the counter, a white paper napkin with a lime-green sketch is pinned to a cork board next to a printed photo of a pink peony. Warm daylight, shallow depth of field.

Negative prompt · all shots

cartoon, illustration, 3D-render look, readable text, letters, logos, watermarks, distorted hands, extra fingers, warped faces, plastic skin, oversaturated colours, flicker, objects morphing outside the transition, superhero, green giant.

Reference workflow

- Draw the napkin for real. Sketch it in lime felt-tip and photograph it top-down in the shop light. Use that photo as the start frame for Shots 1 and 2 and as the pinned napkin in Shot 5, so the sketch is identical everywhere.
- Make keyframes first with an image model (Nano Banana, Flux, Midjourney or similar): the workbench, the real peony bud on the napkin, the bouquet with the lime ribbon, the phone on the street, and the shop counter with the corkboard.
- Lock the details in every prompt: a blush-pink peony, a lime satin ribbon, a forest-green apron with cream sleeves and a dark oak bench.
- Use start and end frames for Shots 2 and 4, so the sketch-to-peony morph and the pull-back out of the phone are single unbroken moves. Seedance's one-take mode can also link Shots 2 and 3.
- One action per shot. Generate four to six takes of each and keep the cleanest hands and petals.
- Hands only. No faces, apart from the stranger seen from behind. That stops people changing between clips.

Edit notes

- Cut on movement, so Shots 1 to 4 feel like one camera move. Hide the joins with motion blur or a short speed ramp.
- Add every word in the edit, in Inter Tight ExtraBold, sentence case, with lime on one key word. The phone's "Order" button is a plain mock-up with no platform logo.
- Grade: forest-black shadows and natural petals, with lime only on the ink, the ribbon and the end card.
- Use the real logo file on the end card. Never generate it.
- Burn in captions for sound-off viewing.
- Music: a minimal, warm pulse that lifts as the peony opens, on a track licensed for commercial use.
- Cut-downs: 15 s (Shots 1, 2, 3 and 6) for Stories and ads, and a 4:5 version for the feed and LinkedIn.
- Label it. Turn on Instagram's "AI info" label and TikTok's AI-generated label, and say "Made with AI" in the caption.

Turning views into leads

- Organic: "Comment NAPKIN, or DM us a photo of your idea." Reply to every one with a short thought on the idea and the booking link. An instant DM reply is the kind of follow-up flow Hulk builds for clients, so it doubles as a demo.
- Paid (Meta and LinkedIn): a "Book now" button to hulkmarketing.co.uk/book-a-meeting/, aimed at owners and marketing leads of UK SMEs in hospitality, retail and local services, weighted around the London, Birmingham, Slough and Manchester offices.
- Retargeting: show the free business audit (/audit/) to people who watched half the video or more.
- Measure: napkin photos sent, consultations booked and audits started.

Before posting

- Check the links. On 28 Oct 2026, hulkmarketing.co.uk/book-a-meeting/, /audit/ and /contact/ loaded as blank pages, while the homepage and /pricing/ worked. Fix them before the ad runs, or point the call to action at /pricing/ for now.
- Keep it honest. The florist is fictional, and no client, result or figure is claimed. Only use "This film started as a sketch too" if the team really draws the napkin first.
