Organic Fostering: "Two Toothbrushes"

CONCEPT

The idea

A single, quiet still-life photo: two children's toothbrushes, one slightly bigger than the other, leaning together in one cup by a bathroom sink in soft morning light. No people, no clutter, just one simple object that says "these two belong together".

It's about fostering siblings: when brothers and sisters are fostered together, they get to grow up side by side. Organic Fostering lists fostering siblings as one of the types of fostering it offers.

Reference

Pinterest blocks automated browsing, so I couldn't open individual pins. The style draws on the minimal "one object tells the story" still-life photography that is popular on Pinterest for charity and lifestyle posts: lots of empty space, soft natural light and one strong idea.

Why it works

- It stops the scroll by being quiet. In a busy feed, one calm, beautiful image with a short line stands out.
- Everyone understands it instantly, and almost everyone has a brother or sister, so it feels personal.
- Lead generation: it speaks directly to people with more than one spare room ("Got room for two?").
- Engagement: "Tag your sibling 👇" is one of the easiest comment prompts there is.

Why it's new

Earlier posts covered cultural matching, the types of fostering as a quiz, and the spare room. This is the first post dedicated to fostering siblings.

Visual direction

- A real photo or a photoreal AI image: a white sink, a simple ceramic cup, two kids' toothbrushes (one peach, one magenta) leaning into each other, and a small tube of children's toothpaste.
- Soft morning window light, pale tiles, lots of clean empty space at the top for the headline.
- Headline in Poppins Bold, dark plum. A small OF logo and the call-to-action line at the bottom.
- No children in the image.

For brothers and sisters in care, staying together can mean everything: the same jokes, the same memories, someone who's always been there.

Fostering siblings is one of the types of fostering we offer. If you have room for two, we'd love to talk. You'll get full training and ongoing support, and it all starts with an informal chat.
